MONDAY, DEC. 17, 1906.

The holiday bustle is on in Barre's well-prepared stores.

The St. Albans Messenger objects to its county—Franklin—being considered anything but populous. The Times has to assure them that they are out of the woods.

The subsequence of the gubernatorial rumor in Vermont has been really remarkable during the past few weeks. One would scarcely know that a governor is to be elected in two years more.

A travel-worn passenger arrived in Montpelier Friday night after a trip of 29 miles and reported that the train stopped 15 minutes at one station, 25 at another and nine more minutes in the middle of a field while the engine steamed up. The same passenger reported that the people boarded an express train and left a distress train. Possibly the railroad figured that the passengers ought to congratulate themselves that they were given the "rest cure" without additional charge.

A bit of fraternal courtesy in a Vermont town was the occasion for calling out the following:

"Mr. J. is one of the leading men of the town. He was a state senator from Windsor county in the legislature of 1900, was on the staff of ex-Governor McCullough and was much talked of for lieutenant governor in the last state election."

The query naturally arises: Why is it necessary to dig up a man's political obituary when extending thanks for a business large-heartedness? Is there any relation between the two? Is the one inter-related with the other in any appreciable extent? Why thrust a prod into a political corpse?

HEWING TO THE LINE.

Vermont officials are shunning all appearance of evil lest they be accused of graft. For instance, the pay of the legislators was held up because the attorney general could find nothing to warrant their being paid for Saturdays and Sundays when the records showed that they were not in session. On recommendation of the attorney general, Auditor Graham and Treasurer Deavitt refused to include the pay for the Saturdays and Sundays until the legislature had legalized it. This carefulness on the part of the treasurer and the auditor is worth commending, but we fail to see the justice or propriety of paying the legislators for Sundays when almost without exception they go home Friday night and do not return until Monday afternoon. Why would it not be better to pay them three dollars for each week day? It must be said in defense of the legislators, however, that this year they were only following a long-established precedent, and precedent alone, for there is nothing in the constitution or statutes to warrant paying them for something which they do not perform.

Resolutions.

The Board of Directors of the Wetmore & Morse Granite company, wishing to express their sense of the great loss that the company has sustained by the death of our late President, Mr. William E. Adams of Montpelier, who has been prominent in its affairs since its inception in 1889, and whose intense optimism, keen judgment and impelling personality so largely aided in guiding it through its season of discouragement and trouble to its present condition of prosperity and promise, hereby resolves: That by the death of William Edson Adams, the Company has lost one of its most valued and capable officers, and the members thereof a loyal friend, whose life has been of the greatest value to his friends and associates and to the community in which he lived and worked, and whose memory will be cherished in loving remembrance.
